Concurrent chemoradiation for localized urothelial cancer: timing of chemotherapy is still the topic of debate. Data on the optimal timing of chemotherapy for chemoradiation for localized, muscle-invasive urothelial cancer are limited. The utility of administering neoadjuvant chemotherapy before radiotherapy has been demonstrated in a few studies with conflicting results. The optimal timing of chemotherapy after radiotherapy has not been investigated as yet. Three issues have been raised by our study on the optimal timing of chemotherapy in patients with localized urothelial cancer treated with concurrent chemoradiotherapy (CRT): (1) the lower local recurrence rate in patients treated with chemoradiation is achieved at the expense of a higher rate of toxicity, (2) the optimal timing of chemotherapy depends on the type of bladder cancer, (3) more studies are needed to determine the impact of chemo-sensitivity of tumour cells. In patients treated with CRT for stage T2 bladder cancer, which generally has a good response to radiotherapy, chemotherapy before or after radiotherapy did not yield significant difference in the two groups with respect to local control or survival. A randomized trial on patients with stage T3 disease is needed to determine whether the addition of chemotherapy could be justified for patients receiving radiotherapy, in particular those with
