The default skin is stored inside the system directory, and can be used at any time. The skins can be saved to the user's folder, allowing you to switch back and forth between them. When the application is started, you are prompted to select the skins that you would like to use. If you want to add a new skin, you can browse through the skins that are installed by the application. You can also load an existing skin from the user's folder. A basic skin management window displays all the skins, their locations, and a few details about the skins. You can choose to save the skins to the user's folder, or the default folder. All the skins are easily changeable. Each skin has an easy-to-read control panel. The control panel gives access to the skin name, background color, color scheme, size, and several other properties. Each skin is also saved with all of its default settings. The skins can also be grouped into categories. The categories are available in the skin's control panel. The controls are self-explanatory and it is very easy to understand. The skin display is also customizable. You can add a frame
