... .. Dawn was approaching when I left the tent. There was no wind. The air was still and clear, and a few rare clouds were barely visible somewhere in the sky. In the east, the sky has turned a soft pink, but the stars have not yet gone out. There was silence in the camp. The tents were also quiet. I thought about what I had to do, and involuntarily shivered. A phrase suddenly popped up in my memory, said by one of my comrades: "There is nothing to climb into hell if you do not know how to do it."
