"Boys and girls have some things in common, but they can also be very different," a character in the video says. "Whether it's boys or girls, they can bully someone because they're acting different." That led many in the community to question the appropriateness of using gender in the video to talk about bullying. Last week, a father took his 7-year-old son to school to make sure the video was not a part of the curriculum. "When I saw the video, I was pretty shocked," said David Jacobs, who has a son in kindergarten. Jacobs took a screen shot of the video on his phone and brought it to school. "I was going to question my son about it," he said. "The other parents should have done the same." Jacobs and his wife are now worried their son will grow up with misconceptions about gender. "They're labeling all boys as bullies and all girls as victims," he said. A school district spokeswoman said the district sent a letter to parents about the video, but hasn't heard back. The district is now working on its new curriculum. "We're trying to create a curriculum that isn't tied to gender," said the district spokeswoman. The spokeswoman said the district isn't requiring the video to be shown in class but encourages parents to watch it with their children. Jacobs said he would like parents to make up their own minds about the video. "The message is not to make the kids aware of gender," he said. �

Q: Create JSON object with variable string I want to create a JSON object from an array with a string that is set to a variable, like this: var json_string = "{"id": 1, "title": "helloworld", "body": "world!"}"; This is the code that i tried: var json_string = "{"id": 1, "title": "helloworld", "body": " + json + "}"; A: You need to escape the value of the json variable before concatenating it to the string. If you have an array of JSONs then you can use concat() like this: var json = [{ "id": 1, "title": "hello world", "body": "this is the body" }]; var json_string = "{" + json.concat(",") + "}"; and then parse it: var json_string = JSON.parse(json_string); Q: What does "yield_self" do in Ruby? I am new to Ruby and I found this in the code I was reading: module Some # to pass in and out methods via this pattern, all you have to do is: # module_method: yield_self def self.module_method @module_method ||= ->{ # use a macro, generate some boilerplate code, you are done! Module.new # yield the new instance of module yield_self # now you can use module_method.call, or pass it into a method: # instance_method } end # A method to add a number to something def add(a,b) return a + b end end When I try to understand what
