Windows 7.Primary hip dislocation after closed reduction of cerebral palsy. We reviewed 15 cases (13 children and 2 adults) with cerebral palsy to ascertain the prevalence of primary hip dislocation in patients with cerebral palsy, and to evaluate the reliability of closed reduction in the treatment of idiopathic hip dislocation. The mean age at diagnosis was 5 years. Two patients had idiopathic hip dislocation. The majority (12 of 15) of cases were reduced by closed means, the second preferred method being traction. There was no significant difference between the reduction rate in children and adults. The need for open reduction was in four cases. Intra-articular surgery, such as transosse
