This invention relates to semiconductor processing and more particularly to a method and apparatus for monitoring and correcting nonuniformities and fluctuations in the processing of semiconductor devices. In processes for fabricating semiconductor devices, the uniformity of processing is of utmost importance. Thus, it is important to be able to monitor the uniformity of these processes at all stages of fabrication so that unexpected deviations from the desired uniformity of the process can be detected and corrected. In the processing of semiconductor devices, nonuniformities can be introduced at any stage of the fabrication sequence. Typically, the early stages involve deposition of materials on a semiconductor wafer and the late stages involve etching away portions of the deposited materials. The processing of semiconductor wafers typically involves a multitude of depositions and etching steps as the various layers of material are deposited on the semiconductor substrate and the layers are subsequently processed to form the desired devices on the semiconductor wafer. For example, the semiconductor wafer may be subjected to a series of high temperature and high vacuum process steps to deposit layers of a desired material. The individual layers are deposited on the wafer using suitable equipment such as an evaporator, an electrochemical cell, a sputter chamber, a cluster tool, a thermal evaporation chamber, or a liquid or plasma source. A typical apparatus for depositing material onto a semiconductor substrate is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,689,428. Once the materials are deposited on the wafer the layers must be processed in accordance with the specifications of the designer in order to form the desired devices on the wafer. The processing sequence may include heating, etching, steaming, doping, implanting, polishing, cooling, or a combination thereof, to remove portions of the deposited layers in a precise way. The devices on the wafer are formed by etching away the deposited layers or by the use of other materials such as polysilicon or silicon dioxide to change the properties of these layers or to form structures.

Description Certificate in Object Oriented Design Requirements: There is a strong tradition of development with object-orientation in the PLOI community, supported by the introduction of object-oriented design in all PLOI courses. At the same time, there are no requirements for object-oriented design in the curriculum of the other subject areas (e.g. theoretical design). In order to address this imbalance, a new field of study was established by the faculty: Certificate in Object Oriented Design. This course is intended to address and strengthen the existing traditions of object-oriented development within PLOI, but at the same time, it is aimed at object-oriented developers outside the PLOI community. This course enables developers who already have a thorough knowledge of OO development to apply the strengths of object-oriented programming, design, and analysis to real-world projects, which will lead to a wider acceptance of object-oriented development in mainstream software development. Learning Objectives Upon successful completion of the course, participants should be able to: Understand and master the concepts of object-oriented development in general, including the following: object-oriented programming object-oriented analysis object-oriented design object-oriented application design object-oriented programming languages systems programming embrace object-oriented development How to obtain a certificate Presenter(s): László Kajdányi, Andrea Melegari First session: (16.10.2017 11:00 – 14:00) Location: Building No. 7, St. Emmeram Campus, Vienna Registration: You can register for the course on this page, but please allow up to three weeks of notice. Note that in case of cancellations, you may have to pay the registration fee twice. In order to claim the certificate, students who have successfully completed the course and signed up for the course within the deadline will have to complete the following forms, including the exam with the online proctoring service, and the course evaluation. The invention relates generally to semiconductor device technology and more specifically to interconnect structures and methods of forming interconnect structures.
