Krakatoa The Krakatoa volcano, also known as Krakatoa, is a submarine volcano located off the coast of Java, Indonesia on the island of Sumatra.Krakatoa is the most well known of a string of 16 volcanoes that make up Indonesia's Sunda Volcanic Arc. Its size and explosivity resemble that of Mount St. Helens, but Krakatoa has erupted some 500 times in the past to form islands of basaltic lava that have added to the Indonesian archipelago. The island's size and the estimated total energy released in these eruptions have made it a primary candidate for inclusion in some calculations regarding global risk to humans due to volcanism, though other factors, such as the elevated abundance of sulfur dioxide gas in the atmosphere around Krakatoa, make its potential hazards much less severe than those of other nearby volcanoes, such as Mount St. Helens. History Krakatoa is located on the Sumatran island of Java. Its eruptions have been dated back to at least the Early Pleistocene. Discovery and exploration Krakatoa's first recorded eruption was in 1883, but small eruptions also occurred in 1815 and 1883-1885. The 1883 eruption was characterized by high velocities and column heights, and it spewed 90 cubic miles (200 km3) of volcanic material into 648931e174
