42 The Tiger (de: Tiger) is a type 59? vehicle that is used by the?United Nations Security Council (UNSC)?for peacekeeping operations. A wheeled vehicle typically presents a single armed with a coaxial-mounted.50 Calibre heavy machinegun for distance engagement. The vehicle also has one rear-facing MG. A crew of one driver and one MG gunner usually operate the gun. A Flakvierling? Waffe? (de: Flakvierling?) may be mounted on a rotating drum for deployment on the turret roof to deal with infantry attacks against the vehicle. The Tiger has been in use by various UNSC nations since the 1990s. It is one of the cheapest in the peacekeeping force inventory. The Tiger Tank design is based from the??Tanks of World War II?, which is a highly mobile and heavy fighting vehicle and is adequate for front line engagements with enemy forces, as well as for patrolling and security tasks. The replacement for the Tiger was the more modern Leopard 2, which is now common in all UNSC peacekeeping operations. However, some nations have selected the older power-horse for missions that require mobility and maneuverability, to complicate enemy efforts to disrupt and destroy their special forces forces. Initially, the Tiger was produced by the German company Buehler Waffenfabrik (de: company that produced guns for civilian use). However, when Buehler was repossessed by the German government, the?Meister AeRmunition GmbH? (?MGA,?master ammunition company) was assigned the contract to

The Belgium group is in service with the UNSC since 1999. By 2016, the MGA is the only manufacturer of Tiger ammunition in the world. Unfortunately, there is not a single sample recorded that came from MGA. This is owed to the many defects that have been found in the manufacturing process from before 2000. So, the only known sample are of the old and defunct AME Tiger Tank 59. In addition, the MGA reported that the Tiger ammunition was made in just a single moment. It was made from a triplet of the ammunition heater that is prone to fracture. Even if the MGA authorized another batch of ammo, it will require more than three times of the current duration
