Chloroquine has a number of benefits, including decreasing the IL-6 level and reducing the bone marrow suppression associated with severe COVID-19. Chloroquine is also relatively inexpensive. Chloroquine is commonly available in over the counter generic drugs, and physicians may be able to prescribe chloroquine with a prescription. The most common side effects of chloroquine are diarrhea, nausea, dizziness, and headaches. A study published by The New England Journal of Medicine found that patients given chloroquine for SARS-CoV-2 had a lower mortality rate than patients given a placebo (such as a dummy pill). It is currently unclear whether chloroquine is effective for the prevention of COVID-19. Hydroxychloroquine is slightly more toxic than chloroquine, and it has not been shown to be effective for the prevention of COVID-19. Hydroxychloroquine has also been associated with increased risk of QT prolongation, which can lead to sudden cardiac death. The use of hydroxychloroquine is often limited by the availability of generics, and in some areas of the US, oral chloroquine is the only option. Discussion The benefits of chloroquine and hydroxychloroquine outweigh the risks for treatment of COVID-19. Hydroxychloroquine should not be routinely used to prevent COVID-19, as it is not currently known whether it is effective and/or safe. Chloroquine remains a potential option for the prevention of COVID-19, but it should be reserved for patients who need prophylactic medication. Patients with existing metabolic conditions or who are on other drugs that affect the metabolism of
